Joe DiMaggio is no longer the most recognized ballplayer of all time by Major League Baseball. Willie Mays has leapfrogged that spot, at least for now. (It's possible we'll have to take it back in a few years if he keeps playing as well as he did at age 77, however.) On the same day the Major League Baseball Player Records book was released, Mays passed Bing Crosby as the top vote getter in league history. Here's Mays' record: Mays, who died Wednesday night, was a 19-time All-Star and a 10-time Gold Glove winner. He ranks among the league leaders in a dozen different categories, including home runs, doubles, RBI, and hits, and was the MVP of the 1954 World Series. When Mays retired in 1962 he hit 511 home runs, the most in the majors, and he won 10 batting titles. He's a member of the Baseball Hall of Fame. Before we move on to the next greatest all-time performer, check out this history on Mays' life in the spotlight, from Baseball Hall of Fame

"My client is unwilling to publicly debate the merits of the charges," Bill McGurn said in a written statement. "Mr. O'Reilly is completely confident that he will be fully vindicated and America will learn that these unfounded claims were motivated by political and financial motivations. Should this trial go forward, Mr. O'Reilly will engage in a full-blown legal defense and will seek damages from the plaintiff and her lawyers." McGurn added that

O'Reilly "will fully cooperate with any and all investigations conducted by Fox News and the corporations to ensure that no other women are subjected to this kind of outrageous behavior."

The statement came after Attorney Eric Dubelier, whose firm represents a former Fox News employee who brought charges against the network's founder, Roger Ailes, announced
